

Jackson Harbor and the Mystery of the Mayors

By Patrick Garcia

Once there was an old town called Jackson Harbor. It was a very nice town but it was not known for its gardening. Yeah gardening was great, but that was not what they were known for. They were known for the strange disappearance of the first eight mayors of the town. And after they each disappeared a strange white mist appeared over their houses.

Well after the disappearance of the eight mayors no one wanted to be mayor. But finally a young man named Jerry Carman agreed to do it. They made him the mayor right away and for a few years everything was going the way it was supposed to. But good times never last. After the first four years things started to go bad. It started with the cemetery. They were finding eyeballs on the ground, and on top of that there were bones. Not the kind of bones I'm sure you're used to. I mean like ribs and toes and that kind of thing. And this kept happening.

Well the mayor had had enough, so he made the decision to leave the once great town and every time he tried to book a flight or a boat the phone service failed, and they didn't have a boat. So for the time being they were stuck on Jackson Harbor. But still he wanted to put a stop to it. So he went to the detective of the town. He got right to work. He started to look at all the gravestones for clues. In a flash he came up with a clue. He said that all of the eyeballs and bones were all on the mayors' grave stones. So they went to the first mayor's house, Jackson was his name. And on his old desk they found a piece of paper that said "For your mistakes all the mayors from now on shall be haunted. Unless the statue is built it will keep happening. - Mayor Jackson." Well now the mayor knew what was coming to him. He knew he wasn't going to live long. And the next morning he was gone.
